So You're Taking Corn Silage, Then What?

Submitted by Tonya Gratz, Green County Land & Water Conservation

Do you leave the ground bare? Or use the solar energy left in the year to grow something to feed the biology in the soil? There are other crops that can be taken for forage besides alfalfa and corn. So hopefully your answer to what goes after corn silage harvest is to plant a cover crop or a forage crop for harvest next spring to protect the soil from erosion and nutrient losses from runoff or leaching. There is ample opportunity to get winter cereals established after harvesting silage and still manage your manure.

There are several cover crops that will over-winter and provide good forage. Cereal rye and triticale are the most popular cereal grains that are used for forage in our area. Some farmers might not want to have a living crop to manage in the spring, so the choices for covers to plant after corn silage include oats or barley that would still give some benefits for covering the soil and feeding the soil biology until they are terminated by winter. The best chance for establishment of any cover crop is by drilling it in. Some have had limited success with broadcasting and aerial applications, but seed to soil contact is vital in getting a good stand established.

Cover crops help scavenge and hold excess nutrients in the root zone that are prone to leaving in runoff or leaching through the soil profile. By adding a cover crop, these plants help "soak up" manure applied to the field. There are several manure application timing methods that are compatible with planting cover crops: immediately after corn silage harvest before planting the cover, right after planting the cover crop or waiting until the cover crop has grown at least 4-6 inches and then apply manure.

There are lots of resources for figuring out the simple, yet complicated conservation practice of cover crops. Most will try to find the solution based on your goals for the cover crop. Some goals that a farmer might aim for include preventing soil erosion, increasing organic matter, protect water quality, enhance nutrient cycling, and even providing forage. One popular resource is the Selector Tool on the Midwest Cover Crops Council's webpage (https://mccc.msu.edu/selector-tool/). It helps guide choices by dialing into your location, goals and current crop. You're able to see the ideal planting window of certain species. UWEX has created a document that details a study done in Dane and Brown Counties, high dairy concentration counties, on planting cover crops after corn silage for spring forage harvest please check out the UWEX publication: https://manitowoc.extension.wisc.edu/files/2020/10/Cover-Crops-Summary-pdf

Hopefully you have been convinced to at least investigate cover crops if you haven't in the past after taking corn silage- your soil will thank you. You are welcome to contact Tonya Gratz with the Green County Land and Water Conservation Department at 608-325-4195 extension 121 to learn more about cover crops after silage.
